MESSAGE FROM THE PRINCIPAL

Informal assessments are completed multiple times during a class to allow teachers and students to better understand how much learning is taking place. If a teacher asks a student to solve an equation on the white board, the student will not receive a mark in the gradebook but both the student and the teacher will know how well the material has been mastered. This is also true for the teacher who asks questions of the class and then calls upon a student to respond. No mark may be made in the gradebook, but the teacher now can make a deliberate decision about whether to move forward or to reteach a concept or skill.
